

Retention Rates

One-year retention rates reported to IPEDS are currently at 43% for first-time full-time students and reflect those first-time full-time students who returned the following fall term. This population represents less than 4% of the total number of new undergraduates who enrolled in 2008-2009. The majority of students at Franklin University attend part-time transfer credit hours from other institutions, work, and have other significant responsibilities including family issues, civic interests, work-related travel, etc. It is not unusual for these obligations to interfere with students' progression in their pursuit of higher education. Franklin University has adopted a comprehensive student success initiative designed to support all students with finishing their degrees.