TAKE A WALK ON A WILDER SIDE OF ACCOUNTING

Columbus, Ohio —Calculators, spreadsheets and conservative suits. If this is your idea of the accounting profession then take another look. Franklin University's Accounting Department is pleased to present "Credits to the Profession," an accounting speakers series featuring extraordinary accounting professionals in non-traditional accounting roles.

The quarterly accounting series will host its next event on Tuesday, March 6, 2007 from 6 to 6:45 p.m. with featured speaker Greg Bell, Associate Director of Finance and IT of the Columbus Zoo. Bell will share his insights about working at the Columbus Zoo and a "wilder" side of accounting.

The "Credits to the Profession" series is just one more example of Franklin's innovative approach toward serving both its students and creating value-added benefits for the community.

So mark your calendars and join us for an exciting look at a wilder side accounting. Admission is free and is open to all interested members of the community.

Franklin University is the quality educational leader among undergraduate accounting programs. Franklin's professional work experienced accounting faculty assists students in developing the skills necessary for success in the accounting profession. Students gain a strong hands-on understanding of the technical accounting principles and develop the necessary skills of research, analysis and communication of accounting concepts, statements, pronouncements, tax authorities and laws as well as accounting ethics and professional responsibility. Franklin's accounting major provides the foundation that is both current and relevant for success in today's accounting profession.
